

ABSTRACT

A Continuous Positive Air Pressure (CPAP) full-face mask employs a flexible shell to allow a single device to comfortably fit a wide variety of users. It preferably employs a positionable guide wire at a periphery of the shell to allow the periphery of the flexible shell to be deformed to conform to the shape of a users face. It additionally uses a simpler design to allow lower cost and improved ease of use.